MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS ACTION

Mighty Morphin Power Teacher

So, your teacher's out sick today, and you gotta have a sub. In walks Shaquille O'Neal. Whoa! Are you dreaming? Not if you had your way. We asked you who you'd want for a substitute teacher, mom, dad, sister or brother, and you told us.

SUBSTITUTE TEACHER

The Shaq-man scored the most points. But Cindy Crawford, Hillary Rodham Clinton. Tim Allen, Bo Jackson, Robin Williams, Paula Abdul and Andrew Shue rated high marks, too. If we morphed them all together, here's what your ideal sub might look like (yikes!). See the list below and tell us what object belongs to which person:

Leg with high-heeled shoe

Court jester White House pennant Mole

Leg and soccer ball Baseball jersey

Answers on Page 103

We thought Mike O'Reilly, 10, had the best reason for wanting Tim Allen as a sub: "He could teach us his grunt." And Melanie Honkins, who forgot to give us her age but did tell us she's from Baltimore, Maryland, said she'd want Michael Iordan for gym teacher because "all of the gym teachers I've ever had have been total dweehs " But our very fave letter came from Adrien Ferguson, 9, who wrote: "For substitute teacher, the editor of DISNEY ADVENTURES (Tommi Lewis] because she would let me read DISNEY ADVENTURES all day long!"

The top vote-getters in the categories of substitute mom. dad. brother and sister are:

Mariah Carey, Janet lackson and Roseanne Arnold shared the crown However, Nicole Iuliana. 11, thought Whitney Houston would be a good mom. She said, "My dream is to star in a movie with my famous mom Whitney."

SUBSTITUTE DAD Arnold Schwarzenegger stomped the competition

· Randall Stewart, 11, voted for a set of mutated parents For mom, X-Men's lean Grev, and for dad, Cyclops!

SUBSTITUTE BROTHER

Ionathan Brandis led the pack, followed by Elijah Wood, Mark-Paul Gosselaar and loey Lawrence. · But Jason Williams, 10, wanted someone else, and for good reason: "...If David Justice from the Atlanta Braves was my big brother. I would probably get season tickets for the Braves."

SUBSTITUTE SISTER

Those roo-cute twins. Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen. won, with Mayim Bialik and Tori Spelling close behind. . Stephanie Sharer, 11, scared us with her siblings choice: "Wednesday as my sister and Pugsley as my brother." . And the award for the most interesting fantasy family goes to: Katherine Kuza, 11, who'd like U2's Bono for her brother, Cindy Crawford as a sister and for her dad. Soul Asylum's Dave Pirner.

I don't wear overalls or aleases.

Austin: If someone has a problem, I want to hear about it. And if I can fix it, I want to make that effort, the same as my character.

Watter: Zack is very adventurous and curious and energetic, and all that is a part of me. I love dancing and making people smile. Amy Jo: Kimberly's into her clothes and the way she looks, and I'm the opposite of that. Thuy Trin il svery quiet.

Thus Trini is very quiet, which I am. She's a very strong character on screen, and I'm very strong. If something's wrong, I need to express it.

Austin: My character's strong point is political science. David: Yeah, but Jason's a jock.

Austin: Jason's not a jock. He's a very athletic student who takes a lot of pride in what he does. Walter: Jock!

DA: Which Power Ranger eats the most?

Austin: Jason. Walter: Zack.

Jason.

Austin: Yeah, OK, it's Zack. He sits down at these big bowls of ice cream, like bathtubs of ice cream.

DA: Since you do your own stunts, how do you keep in shape?

Austin: I've been studying martial arts since I was 5. I help instruct, too.

DA: Do you hang out together?

Walter: Yeah. We play volleyball, football, go rock climbing, do gymnastics.

Amy Jo: Thuy and I go to flea markets. I let Thuy do the talking 'cause she's a good bargainer.

Thuy: Last weekend, Amy Jo got the coolest suede jacket for $20!

David: All of us went out for my birthday and sang karaoke songs.

Austin: Me, David and an assistant director sang a rap song. We nicknamed ourselves "The Studs."

David: I got up with Amy Jo and sang a song from Grease. Walter: I sang, "Great Balls of Fire"!

DA: Who are your favorite superheroes? Austin: Supermon.

Thuy: Wonder Woman.
Walter: Mighty Mouse.
David: Robin Hood.
Amy lo: The Wonder Twins.

DA: Have you seen the Power Rangers dolls?

David: We have the old ones. We haven't seen the new ones with our faces on them yet. Walter: My dad was walking around downtown sticking the dolls in people's faces, asking "If anyone wants to meet my son-here, Mastodon!"

DA: Do you get recognized?

Amy Jo: The others do. It never happens to me. I don't wear makeup, and I don't dress in pink at all.

Thuy: I don't usually dress in vellow.

Amy Io: But you look like Trini. I don't look anything like Kimberly.

Walter: After the earthquake. I went to some shelters to try to cheer up the kids. When some kids watching TV saw me, their mouths dropped open. "You look just like Zack from the Power Rangers!" they said. And a whole bunch of kids crowded around me.

The first thing we all did was let go of our pencils to watch them float.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 19

I set up the ham radio experiment today. With help from ham radio operators on the ground, we can talk to kids around the world anytime we have a free moment.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 20
I Just got done washing up. We can't shower in orbit—the water floats around and gets into everything. So we use special liquid scap and shampoo that you don't have to rinse off. To clean my teeth, I use a plain o'l toothbrush and toothpaste. Some of the others spit out the toothpaste into a washcloth. I just swallow it.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21
We're finishing off the fresh foods we brought up—apples, dried prunes and tortillas. We bring tortillas instead of sliced bread because they take up less space and don't make as many rumbs to float around. We also have freeze-dried food and thermostabilized food. (That means all the pacteria was killed off before the food was sealed.) All the food is delicious—we eat constantly, even when we're full.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 22
I've been getting about six or seven hours of sleep every night. I sleep in sort of a hanging sleeping bag so I don't drift around and bump into equipment or other people. I just kinda float inside the bag. I'm wearing earplugs (the machinery on board is noisy) and an eye mask, because we move from darkness to daylight every 45 minutes as we go ground the world.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23
I'm kickin' back and listening to music on my Walkman. I've got everything here from Beethoven to Garth Brooks to

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 24

I got to play Junior Doctor today. I had to prick my finger to do a blood-sugar test. A big part of this mission is learning how weightlessness affects the human body. Sometimes muscles get weak and bones get soft. I feel fine though.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 25 I had a good ol' grilled steak for dinner tonight. We just put 'em in the oven and heat 'em up. And we have all kinds of drinks: lemonade, orange juice,

Blood in the lower body flows to the chest and head. Result: A nuffy face and skinny legs make you look liké a human Pez dispenser. When you reenter Farth's atmosphere and blood flows back to your feet you might faint

Your body deals with extra blood in the chest. Result: Your heart nets bigger. (Back on Earth, it shrinks to normal size.)

More upper-body blood makes your body think it has too much fluid, so it gets rid of some Result Lots of hathroom time

Bones lose calcium and get thinner because they aren't needed as Muscles waste away. because you don't use them as much You have to work out about two hours in space to equal 20 minutes of exercise down here Result You're not as buff.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 27 I've discovered a great way to eat. I wrap my feet around a bar or something on the ceiling and kind of perch up there, eating upside down. It doesn't feel like eating upside down because there's no gravity.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28

I'm getting used to working in space. On Earth, if you drop a pen, it falls to the floor, so you look for it there. In space, it does no good to look for it there, because the pen hasn't fallen. It's drifting-so slowly you don't notice it. You spend a lot of time looking for your pen before getting back to work. I have to get in the habit of securing everything when I'm finished with it.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 29

One of the best things about this mission is that it's like being on a trip with my six best friends. I've been trying to get up here since 1979. It was worth the wait!

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30

By the time we land, we will have traveled 5.8 million miles and circled the Forth 225 times The total mission time will be 14 days, 13 minutes-the longest shuttle mission ever. And I'm a part of it!

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 31 I spent five hours in the Lower Body Negative Pressure Device today. It sounds scary, but it's basically like half a sleeping bag with a vacuum attached. In space, your body pushes blood up into your chest and head. The negative pressure device forces blood back into your leas. so you won't get lightheaded when you return to Earth. For Halloween, we blew up an inflatable iack-o'-lantern. Ground Control loved that.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 1 Landing went great! The light

Dealing with gravity again made me feel like my feet were stuck in concrete! My balance is a little off, but I feel areat.

It transparts cargo like satellites and building materials to and fram space and serves as a scientific lab and satellite service center.

NASA has four aperating shuttles (alsa known as orbiters)—Atlantis, Calumbia, Discavery and Endeavaur. Each shuttle gaes up albut twice a year.

The three main engines are located in the aft (rear) of the shuttle. They propel the arbiter into space during launch by burning liquid hydragen and liquid axygen.

olly can't believe she's here. After entering Habitat, the high-tech copy of NASA's future space station, she's fitted for her flight suit and assigned to a sleeping bay. Tomorrow, her astrongut training begins.

Holly is 10 years old, and she's just arrived at Space Camp in Huntsville, Alabama. Every year from February to December, kids from all over the world meet at Space Camp to become astronauts for five days. The training is intense—but so is the sectionem.

First, Helly is assigned to a team. Over the next few days, her team goes through basic astronaut training. They get up at 6 a.m. for exercises, then learn to build working rockets and to track satellites on computers. After the basics, they train for their one-hour simulated space shuttle mission.

For the mission, Holly's team is divided into two six-member crews: Mission Control and Flight Crew. Mission Control stays on the "ground," tracking the shuttle with a bank of computers and guiding the astronauts through the mission. The Flight Crew is made up of the shuttle pilot, a flight commander and four scientists. The pilot and flight commander run the shuttle while the scientists perform experiments.

All the team members study hard for their roles. On mission day, they put on their flight suits. The Flight Crew enters Space Camp's model of the shuttle Columbia. Mission Control sits at their computers. The shuttle makes a deafening roar at liftoff, and inside, chairs vibrate and floors shake. Even though the shuttle never leaves the ground, everything seems totally real. And the crew has to deal with two unplanned "emergencies" (like a fuel leak in one of the engines) before they can return to Earth. When they complete the mission, they feel like they've been to space and back!

If you're chosen to train, you head to a one-year stint in candidate school at Johnson Space Center in Houston, Texas. You start training with lots of eight-hour days in class, studying math, science and computers.

hurl into weightlessness by taking trips on a KC-135 jet—better known as the Vomit Comet, because more than half the people who ride the plane can't stomach it. It's easy to see why: After you climb on board, the jet takes off and does a series of high-speed climbs and dives over the Gulf of Mexico. As the jet dives, passengers experience zero gravity—meaning you float in the air for about 25 seconds before the jet hits gravity again.

Of course, that doesn't give you much time to practice jumping into your space suit. But astronauts have been known to float around inside the jet, bounce off its padded walls, or compete to see who can do the most flips. Sometimes they pour a drink out of a container, and as the weightless liquid floats in the air, they try to stick straws in the jiggling globs and take a drink.

But heads up! When you hear a bell ring, you only have a few seconds before the plane levels out and you hit gravity. More than one astronaut has landed on his head after goofing around and ignoring the warning bell.

the final cut, you get to work on the simulator—the most realistic part of training. You lie back in your seat, feel the shaking of a launch and hear the roar of liftoff. As the "flight" continues, you see stars and Earth out the window. Astronaut Parazynski claims that a simulated shuttle ride is so much like the real deal that when astronauts go on their first real flight, they often feel as if they've been in space before.

"But the simulators are geared to give you the worst day imaginable," says Parazynski. "Just when you think you have one problem handled, the instructors throw you two more." In fact, astronauts often say their actual flights were dull compared to the heetic simulators.

SURVIVAL TRAINING

Astronauts even learn survival techniques in case they have to bail out over water or a jungle. Astronauts used to tromp through Guatemalan jungles and Mexican deserts, catching and roasting iguanas for dinner (mmmmm, pass the sail). But today the training's more relaxed. Crews learn about survival in a Washington state forest. Between learning to catch fish and make tents out of parachutes, astronauts have been known to sneak in a few donuts and 5'mores—in case they can't find berries, of course.

If all this makes you stoked about space, you're not alone. "I pinch myself thinking I get paid to have so much fun," Parazynski says. "It's the most exciting job in the universe."

Greg Stinis (left, in the short-sleeved shirt) plans another skywriting mission. "I have to map out a trail for each word, timing every letter and turn down to the second." he says.

Skywriter Greg Stinis lives to write big. We're talking letters taller than the Empire State Building and words a mile wide. Through his company, Skytypers U.S.A. in Los Alamitos wide. Through his company, Skytypers U.S.A. in Los Alamitos, California, he covers the sky with everything from Olympic rings to sentences such as "Will You Marry Me?"

Greg flies a single-engine AT-6 plane, the kind used for training Air Force pilots. It's been specially equipped with a smoke machine that shoots trails of vapor puffs on his command. But writing smoke words takes more than a couple of ioop-de-loops. He has jo think upside down and backward so the words look right from the ground. He also has to think fast because he's flying at about 150 miles an hour.

"To make an I," Greg says, "I make one long puff. An S is two 60-degree turns. M is the toughest, because the angles on the hump have to be perfect."

Greg also does "skytyping."
This is how it works: Five planes fly in a straight line, 300 feet between wing tips. A computer tells them when to release vapor puffs, which form letters.

Skytyping creates the world's largest billboards; people can see them from almost 15 miles away. In a clear sky, messages can stay up for 20 minutes.

"When I wrote 'The Swarm Is Coming' to advertise the movie, The Swarm, the message just would not go away," says Greg. "It was spooky, 'cause it looked like it was following me."

Greg has done skywriting in commercials and movies, puffed out a "Welcome" to former President Bush, wished Disneyland a happy birthday, and once skywrote in Japanese! What was his weirdest request?

"A kid wanted me to fly over his classroom and write out the answers to a chemistry exam," Greg says. "Of course, I turned that one down." —Debbie Beyer

Okay kids, quick reminder. There is a food as irresistible as me. That's right, WHISKAS' brand cat food. Cats prefer WHISKAS' because it's made with USDA-approved beef and other top ingredients.

So next time your kitty cat is hungry, please think of me. Feed your little beast WHISKAS* cat food, and you'll make the world a safer place for birds everywhere.
